Reading Turowicz: "Antisemitism" | online - ZOOM

"One cannot join antisemitism with Catholicism. Antisemitism is in its very essence completely pagan" – wrote Jerzy Turowicz in 1957, 12 years after the war and 11 years before the events of March 1968. In the article "Tygodnik Powszechny," the editor-in-chief was featured on the cover and describes the attitude of Poles, especially Catholics, to Jews in Communist Poland of the 1950's. The article is a brave critique of antisemitism which, in the author's opinion, was reviving in Poland at the time, from the point of view of a Christian, and, more specifically, a Catholic. What is, in Turowicz's opinion, the scale, character, and source of antisemitism? Which of his conclusions can be criticized today in the light of today's historical knowledge of Polish attitudes towards the Shoah? Did the vision of Catholicism by the editor-in-chief of "Tygodnik Powszechny" survive to today? And if yes, in what form? Do we view antisemitism, from a contemporary perspective, as a disgraceful behavior which is far from a Christian and patriotic attitude? We will ask these questions during a meeting with our guests.
